

≡ Item Navigation

Esports Media Channels

Esports news and content can be found in a variety of sources. Below are some of the major media channels Esports enthusiasts can visit to find written, video, or live content.

Reddit.com

Reddit, a social news aggregation site, has become one of the key websites to locate current information about Esports. There is a central Esports forum, which houses many subreddit forums that cover an assortment of Esports topics. These subreddits work on a simple upvote/downvote system, where the most popular content of the day starts at the top and descends in order based on how long it has been posted, how many upvotes it has received, etc. Overwatch, League of Legends, Counter Strike: Global Offensive, Hearthstone, and Super Smash Brothers all have their own highly-trafficked subreddits, as do many other popular Esports. If you can't find a certain Esport, just go to any search engine, type that Esport's name followed by the word "subreddit," and it should appear.

Journalistic & Video Content

Esports news also comes from a variety of websites dedicated to providing journalistic pieces and video content. Listed below are some prominent Esports news-sharing websites and a short description of the type of content they tend to focus on.

ESPN.com/esports

Majority of focus is on journalistic pieces like game recaps, player interviews, team rankings, and opinion pieces.

- A year in review: Lessons from 2017 League of Legends
- Opinion: It's time to recognize esports as individual entities
- FlyQuest accepted as NA LCS franchise

BlitzEsports.com

Majority of focus on video content. Content can range widely from player, coach, and owner interviews, to pieces talking about the industry as a whole, and much more. There will also be occasional written game analysis pieces.

- Rick Fox on What Owning a Team Means to Him
- Why Pros are running Minion Dematerializer, and When/How You Can Use It

DotEsports.com

Majority of focus on journalistic pieces, covers a variety of Esports.

- The 9 Best Dota 2 Heroes for Beginners

theScoreEsports.com

All-around focus of news that also highlights game recaps.

- Best CS:GO Plays of the Year - 2017

EsportsObserver.com

Majority of focus is on giving Esports-focused business news.

- Video Gaming Revenues Reach \$108.4 Billion, SuperData Report Shows

Twitch.tv

Twitch.tv is a streaming platform for players and viewers. Players can set up an account that allows anyone to watch them playing a game. To find a stream, viewers must first pick a game they are interested in watching, and then select a specific streamer account. While not quite a news site, you can learn a lot about an Esport title by watching someone actively play it. Depending on the streamer, you can get content that runs the gamut from informative and educational to simply "messaging around."